2034 Millers Mill Road
Private

Description:

The house at 2034 Millers Mill Road is located on the west side of the road, and set well back from the road, approximately ¼ mile southwest of Cooksville in northern Howard County, Maryland. The house is a one-story, three-bay by three-bay frame structure with a parged foundation, vinyl siding, and a hip roof with asphalt shingles and a short ridge running east-west. There is a brick chimney set west of center on the ridge. The north elevation has a one-bay porch in the center with a concrete deck, iron balustrades and posts, and a hip roof. It covers triple one-over-one sash to the east and a new door to the west that has an oval leaded glass light. The west elevation has three one-over-one sash, with the center window shorter than the others. The south elevation has a pair of large sliding glass doors in the east bay. There is a modern wood deck to the south of this doorway. The east elevation has a short one-over-one sash in the south bay, a full-size one-over-one sash in the center, and no opening in the north bay.

Significance:

The house at 2034 Millers Mill Road is a descendant of the early twentieth century workingman's foursquare, a one-story hipped-roof house that was a smaller version of the plain foursquare. This version is larger than its predecessor, eliminating the need to add dormers and use the attic as living space. Public rooms were ranged along the east side of the house, with bedrooms across the west. This example is dated to 1963, according to the tax assessment, but the large version of this type was popular immediately after World War II and is probably a progenitor of the ranch house. It does not have an attached garage, which is a throwback to pre-war housing and is probably the feature that most distinguishes it from the ranch house. It is scheduled to be demolished in 2010 and the lot redeveloped.

The house at 2034 Millers Mill Road is located on the west side of the road, and set well back from the road, approximately ¼ mile southwest of Cooksville in northern Howard County, Maryland. The house is a one-story, three-bay by three-bay frame structure with a parged foundation, vinyl siding, and a hip roof with asphalt shingles and a short ridge running east-west. There is a brick chimney set west of center on the ridge. The north elevation has a one-bay porch in the center with a concrete deck, iron balustrades and posts, and a hip roof. It covers triple one-over-one sash to the east and a new door to the west that has an oval leaded glass light. The center sash in the triple sash is narrower than those that flank it. To either side are paired one-over-one sash. The west elevation has three one-over-one sash, with the center window shorter than the others. The south elevation has a single one-over-one sash in the west bay, paired one-over-one sash in the center, an exterior chimney between these that is covered with vinyl siding, and a pair of large sliding glass doors in the east bay. There is a modern wood deck to the south of this doorway. The east elevation has a short one-over-one sash in the south bay, a full-size one-over-one sash in the center, and no opening in the north bay.
