DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Waterford Farms consists of two fine stone buildings, which face west on the north side of Jennings Chapel Road, 1/2 mile east of its intersection with Daisy Road.

As you approach the residential area of the farm, which lies east of a large barn and auxiliary building, you come to the two houses, one to the north and one to the south.

That on the north is a composition of three separate buildings; a two story high log building, and a two story high, stone east and west wing.

The stone west wing; is a three bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) stone (covered with stucco) building, resting on a stone foundation, with wide brick chimneys inset into its north and south walls. The two story high, five bay wide, one room deep, intersecting gable roof (running east-west) stone and log kitchen - dining room, east wing originally formed a "T" plan but was filled in by a two story high, almost totally enclosed, frame addition along the entire north elevation of the log and stone east wing and a two story high, open porch on the south wall of the log section. A square brick chimney is inset into the east wall of the log section, with a wide brick chimney inset into the east wall of the stone section of the east wing. Still another brick chimney is inset into the east wall of the frame addition to the log-stone section.

THE WEST FACADE OF WEST WING

The west facade holds an open bible, cross paneled, rectangular, entrance door in its south bay, flanked by flat pilasters and two vertical side-lights, and surmounted by a four light transom. It is covered by a flat roofed, open portico, supported by two square columns and two flat pilasters.

Two wide, poured in place, cement steps lead to its cement landing, which rests on a stone foundation.

North of the entrance rest two rectangular, double-hung windows, holding six-over-six lights, underlined by wooden sills and decorated with wooden shutters. Beneath lie two vertically aligned, three light basement windows, set into the stone foundation, and surmounted by wooden lintels. Three similar, vertically aligned, proportionally scaled, rectangular, double-hung, second floor windows, holding six-over-six lights, rest above.

THE SOUTH ELEVATION OF THE WEST WING

This wall holds only two six light, rectangular, attic casement windows.

THE NORTH ELEVATION OF THE WEST WING

The north elevation of the front section or west wing, holds a rectangular, double-hung, vertically aligned, proportionally scaled, first and second floor window in the west bay, and two six light, attic casement windows. The east bay holds a cellar door.

NORTH ELEVATION OF THE LOG & STONE SECTIONS

A two story high, frame addition has been added along this wall, with the roof raised and covered by a gable roof. The second floor of the frame north wall of the log section of the house holds two second floor, six-over-six light windows, while the frame north wall of its stone wing holds another two, second floor, six-over-six light windows. Along the entire north elevation of these two sections runs a one story high, shed roofed, open porch, which is enclosed on the west to form an enlarged, interior den area. This enclosed area holds a central, east, west and north, two-over-two light window, underlined by a wooden sill.

The frame north wall of the stone addition holds a central, rectangular, entrance door flanked on the west by a six light, square window and on the east by a tall, six-over-six light, rectangular window. Four open, wooden steps lead to the shed roofed, porch landing, which is enclosed on its north and west sides, and covers the north entrance, as well as the east window of the den addition.

THE EAST ELEVATION OF THE STONE & FRAME ADDITION.

The east elevation holds the wide, two story high, stone wall of the stone house addition, whose second floor is stuccoed. The frame north bay is clearly marked which was added along the north wall of both the stone and log sections of the house, which have just been described.

This frame addition rests on a stone foundation and holds on its east wall a first and second floor, vertically aligned, proportionally scaled window, underlined by a projecting wooden sill.

A gable roof now covers both the stone-log section and its frame north bay and holds a central, rectangular, six-over-six light, attic window on its east wall.

THE SOUTH ELEVATION OF THE LOG HOUSE

The first floor of the south elevation of the log house is completely exposed. It holds a central, rectangular, open bible and cross paneled. entrance door, flanked by rectangular, six-over-six light, first floor windows.

Its second floor holds a rectangular entrance in its west bay and six-over-six light, second floor windows in its central and east bays. A two story high, shed roofed open porch covers and runs along the entire east facade of this log section.

THE SOUTH ELEVATION OF THE STONE EAST WING

The south elevation holds a west bay, six light, rectangular entrance door, with a double, rectangular window in the east bay, each component a six-over-six light window. The log joists for the second floor are exposed on this elevation. A wide cement patio runs along this section of the building, meeting a similar one along the log section. East of the house and located at the base of a slope of ground, a gabled roof, stone spring house is found, while at the northeast corner of the building complex stands a gabled roof, log smokehouse. The stone house, which lies south of the log and stone house, faces west. Once a ruin, it has now been completely rehabilitated. It is a four bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) stone house, resting on a stone foundation, with wide stone, exterior chimneys centered on its north and south walls and a four bay wide, one room deep, one story high gabled roof (running north-south) frame south wing.

THE WEST FACADE OF SECOND STONE HOUSE

The west facade holds a rectangular, cross paneled entrance door in the second north bay. A three-three light, rectangular, first floor casement window, underlined by a stone sill and decorated with wooden shutters rests on either side of this entrance door.

Two similar first floor windows, but holding four-four lights, rest in the two south bays. Four similar, vertically aligned and proportionally scaled second floor windows, holding three-three lights, rest above. Two four light basement windows, set into stone wells, are placed on the south side of this wall.

The west wall of the frame, south wing holds a rectangular batten wood door in its second south bay and a first floor window, similar to those described, but underlined by a projecting wooden sill, in its south bay. Two other similar, first floor windows rest in its two north bays. A white picket fence runs along this entire west elevation of the frame addition, as well as along its south wall, creating a kitchen garden.

THE SOUTH ELEVATION OF SECOND STONE HOUSE

The south elevation of the stone house holds a second floor window, similar to the others described, in its west bay. A cellar door rests beneath it.

The south wall of the frame south wing holds a central, first floor window, similar to those described.

THE EAST ELEVATION

The east elevation of the frame south wing holds three, square, equally spaced, four light casement windows.

The three south bays of the stone house hold three five-five light, rectangular french doors, all of which are covered by a one story high, shed roofed, screened in porch. A rectangular, beaded, batten wood door is placed in the third north bay, with two windows, similar to those on the west facade, in the two north bays. A shed roofed, open lattice runs along this side of the east wall.

Five second floor windows, similar to those on the west wall, rest above.

THE NORTH ELEVATION

The north elevation holds a first and second floor, vertically aligned window, similar to those already described, in its east bay with a square louvred attic window on each side of the exterior stone chimney, previously mentioned.

The property is beautifully maintained with every building kept in excellent condition.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Waterford Farms is one of the finest examples of Howard County vernacular, log-stone and frame architecture constructed in some four time frames¹, easily dating back to the first half of the nineteenth century, with its earliest log section possibly late eighteenth century.² Additionally, it is associated with the prominent Banks family of Howard County, Maryland.³

EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. This building is an excellent example of how a simple three bay wide, one room deep, two story high, log house of the late eighteenth or early nineteenth century, grew into a larger, more commodious dwelling by the addition of 1) a two story high, similar stone building constructed along its east wall either in the late eighteenth or early nineteenth century and 2) another three bay wide, one room deep, two story high, stone building constructed along its west wall. This three sectional house, just described, most probably existed intact in this manner by the time of Samuel Banks will in 1853. The interior features large cooking fireplaces in the log section and east wing. That in the east wing features its original cooking crane.

One or two later modifications were made to the north elevation of both the log section and east wing. Initially a two story high, frame addition was constructed along these two sections of the house, with a one story high, semi-enclosed, porch, running along the entire north elevation. At the same time, the roofs of both the log and stone east wing of the complex were then raised. This can be most clearly seen on the east elevation of the stone house, revealing the frame addition and attic gable line. Most recently a portion of the original open porch along the north elevation of the log house has been enclosed to provide additional space for a den area.

2. Although the three early sections of this house are generally believed to date back to at least the last quarter of the eighteenth century, they can readily be traced back to the will of Samuel Banks, dated April 15, 1853, where he mentions the farm given to his son, Henry Banks of 332 acres and noted on Attachment 5 as lot #2. These buildings were located on lot #2 and comprised the home farm of Henry Banks, son of Samuel.

In 1894 the farm was partitioned between the three oldest sons of Henry and Arianna and remained in the family until 1902, when Mr. William T. Knill acquired it, holding it for over thirty-five years. In 1938, Mr. Knill sold the farm to Pierce and Anna Butler, whose family now operates a sod farm here under Waterford Joint Ventures.

3. Waterford Farms is associated with the Banks family of Howard County, which settled along the west side of Route 97 and the north side of Jennings Chapel Road in the early nineteenth century. By the time of his will, dated April 15, 1853, Samuel Banks had acquired considerable acreage in this area, owned some 34 slaves and resided at HO-10, Villa deEsperanza, just north of Cattail Farm and east of HO-494, Waterford Farms, all once a part of his extensive holdings. He and his "beloved wife Matilda," in addition to their "dwelling plantation" or "home farm," had already given to their son, Henry Banks, lot #2 (see Attachment 5) or some 332 acres of land with five slaves. In addition to their son, Henry Banks, Samuel also mentions his daughter, Sarah Ann Bartholow, who acquired 192 acres and five slaves, a daughter Margaret, who acquired Cattail Farm and five slaves, and two younger daughters, Maria Louisa and Leanna Banks, who each acquired five slaves. His holdings at that time comprised some 930 3/4 acres of land and thirty-four slaves, which he divided among his wife and children. Henry Banks and his wife, Arianna, resided at Waterford Farms all through the turbulent 1850's and through the Civil War. At the end of that war, in 1865, Henry Banks died, leaving his farm to his wife, Arianna, and their seven children; Thomas, Henry, William, Dennis, Henrietta, Matilda Banks Jones and Samuel Banks. On April 20, 1894, the three oldest sons, Thomas, Henry and William made a deed of partition of the 350 acre farm of their father, Henry Banks. (61-406.) Thomas and Henry mortgaged their two thirds of the farm, eventually selling it to William T. Knill in 1902. William O. Banks also sold his third of the property in that same year to the same William T. Knill, who held it for over thirty-five years, thus ending the tenure of the Banks family at Waterford Farms.
