The William Brian House faces west on the east side of Old Columbia Pike, 6/10 of a mile north of its intersection with Route 103. Although the house is set relatively close to the road, closer than many of its neighbors, landscaping now makes it difficult to see the two and 1/2 story front facade which is composed of two halves – each a two-bay section, the slightly wider northeast one in frame and the more compact southwestern one of ashlar granite. The two halves are still unified by a shallow pitched gable roof whose ridge runs parallel to the Pike. They once shared a single front porch with hipped roof porch. Its asymmetrical rubble infill outline on the stone façade implies that not only was a porch original to the stone structure's construction, but also that the stone half of the building may have been added to an earlier frame portion of the house.

The ashlar extends around the dwelling only as quoins along the corners. The granite appears to be the same stone used throughout much of Ellicott City, quarried locally along the railroad tracks. The secondary walls are rubble with large granite window lintels. Not only was the front porch removed, but also the brick chimney extending above the central load-bearing wall within the frame section. (See MIHP Form 622, c. 1980 photo by Cleora Thompson.) A square, two-story, shed-roofed addition extends off the rear of the frame section, constructed in 1993, and visually integrated by continuous siding. Most windows in the house are 6/6, with the exception of those in the NE corner of the new addition. The property is in good condition, having been totally renovated in 1993, but significant portions of the historic fabric were altered during the 1993 renovation, compromising the architectural integrity. This house no longer embodies sufficient distinctive characteristics of a mid 19th Century Ellicott Mills granite dwelling to warrant individual NR nomination under Criterion C. It has no chimney, no pre-1993 staircase, no front porch, no access to the cellar under the granite portion of the house (closed up).

Current owners Farner and Jeschke undertook major renovations to the collapsing structure at the end of 1993. The front porch, standing seam roofing, rear additions and the brick chimney were quite deteriorated, and were removed. Ms. Jeschke, an architectural historian, indicated¹ that (1) the foundation/cellar for the front two sections has not changed, (2) no footprint for a rear addition to the stone section appeared to exist, (3) there was no evidence of a stair in the stone section, and (3) no chimney served the stone section independently (back-to-back fireplaces shared the one chimney in the southwestern end of the frame section. When the balloon-framing supporting wallboard covered with wallpaper was uncovered, the current owners came to the conclusion that the frame section now standing was erected in the 1910s or 1920s, consistent with the architectural styling of the house's only staircase (open stair with simple square stock balusters), which was replaced at the time of the 1993 renovation. She believes, based on the balloon framing, narrow floors boards of uniform width, wallpaper applied directly to wallboard (no plaster or paint) and the simple open railing of the winder staircase, that the existing frame section dates to the first quarter of the 20th Century.

Jeschke noted that there had been a dry-stacked, circular stone wall approximately 3' above grade and 5' in diameter (the well?) in the widest part (rear) of their trapezoidal lot and there had been remains of a stone foundation for a small, remote outbuilding when they took over the property. These stone were used in subsequent landscaping projects. Jeschke also remarked that the previous owners had once shared a septic system with the American Four Square property to the southwest, apparently linked when members of the same family (Brians and Gaithers) occupied both houses. The back yard of the now .81 acre right angle trapezoidal lot has a modern patio, swimming pool and shed.

While the basic architectural character of this structure is typical of Ellicott City's vernacular, granite and frame 19th Century residential architecture and construction, the real interest that may make this property unique is its relationship to the larger parcel of land from which it was carved in the 19th Century. The current tax assessment records date the structure to 1860, although it could be earlier as the architectural styling of the stone section closely mimics "Tongue Row," a small group of mill workers dwellings constructed further in town on Old Columbia Pike (a block off Main Street within the Ellicott City Historic District). Joetta Cramm's² research indicates the Tongue Row buildings were built in pairs c. 1842 and 1843.

The 1860 Martenet Map attributes the dwelling to Elizabeth Benoy. Census records as far back as 1850³ list her as a separate household, 44, English, and blind, with daughter Mary J., 13. While no specific evidence has yet been uncovered, it is not unreasonable to speculate that the owners (Talbotts or Hayden) of "Talbot's Last Shift"/"Pleasant Fields" may have given Elizabeth Benoy a piece of land or sold the small parcel to her from their much larger holdings. When Benoy transferred the land in 1871 to her adult, married daughter, it was one acre.

By 1870, William Brian, 43, is listed in the census as head of household, and his trade was stonemason. His wife Mary, 52 [error - should be 32], was keeping house and had foreign-born parents. Her mother Elizabeth Benoy, 64, who resided with them, was not able to write, probably because she was blind. Also at home were five children: Florence, 15, Rosa, 13, Georgia, 11, Ida, 9, and Charles, 1. The 1862 draft report⁴ lists William "Brine" as 30 and a stonemason from Ellicott Mills, as Ellicott City was called at the time.

² Joetta Cramm is well-respected local researcher, historian, and author.

Continuation Sheet No. 2

HO-559

In a June 1871 deed (Liber WWW 31, Folio 154), Elizabeth Benoy gave the buildings and one acre of land, being part of the tract known and called by the name of "Pleasant Fields" to her daughter, Mary J. Brian, wife of William Brian. It specifically makes reference to a black rock near the house and a stone wall. Elizabeth Benoy signed the deed with an "X," but there is absolutely no reference to a previous deed or will that might explain how she came to inherit this acre of "Pleasant Fields."⁵

Perhaps Mary married the mason who built the stone house for her mother, or perhaps she and her mother already lived on the land in a frame dwelling (replaced later in the early 20th Century atop the earlier 19th Century foundation) and when Mary and William Brian married after he finished constructing "Pleasant Fields" for Hayden,⁶ he built the stone addition for their growing family. These relationships remain speculative and unclear. The age, architectural styling comparable to Ellicott City's 19th Century granite buildings, and a possible relationship between this house/family and the large more prestigious "Talbot Last Shift"/"Pleasant Fields" property could be further explored in the records of the MD Historical Society prior to considering National Register eligibility.

The 1878 Hopkins Map erroneously spells the Brian name as "Bryan." This error was carried forward into the MIHP Form done in 1980 by Cleora Thompson.

The 1880 census lists William Brian as 52 and a stone mason, with wife Mary J., 40, keeping house with nine children: Florence, 23, Rosa, 21 (both teaching school), and Georgia, 19, Ida, 17, Willie, 16, Charles, 10, Walter, 8, at school and little ones Edith, 6, and Nannie, 1, at home. Also listed is mother-in-law, Elizabeth Benoy, blind, born in England, as were her parents. The 1920 census lists Mary J. Brian, 82, as head of household and owning the house. Widowed, she lived with her daughters Ida, 50, single and a teacher in public school, and Edith, 45, and a lodger Sadie Heath, 17, who served as housekeeper for the family.

In 1921 (Liber 112, Folio 342), Mary J. Brian sold a small part of the lot to Irvin Gaither, assumedly for the construction of his American Four Square house just to the south of the frame and stone house.

On 7 June 1955, Nancy L. Brian [probably the "Nannie" born in 1879], single, daughter of Mary J. Brian, transferred the property to Mary R. Gaither, who was her unmarried niece.⁷ Gaither sold it to Albert A. German and wife Margaret in 1964. Margaret German sold it in 1978 to David Booth. Two years later David J. Booth and Sandra E. Booth sold the land to John Josselson. Josselson died on 8 October 1992, and his Personal Representative sold the property to the current owners David P. Farner and Katherine Jeschke in 1993.

In the middle of the 19th Century, Elizabeth Benoy and her daughter, Mary J., may have lived in a frame or log dwelling on the foundation of the NW corner of the current building. William Brian, Mary's husband may have built the stone addition for their expanding family, explaining why there was no separate chimney nor staircase for the stone section of the house. The stone section has its original random width (approx. 3 1/4" up to 12-13") flooring, but the only access to its partial basement was from the frame section's cellar and the only access to the second floor was through the frame section also.

The questions remain: How did a blind woman from England and her daughter end up living on this lot prior to the construction of Pleasant Fields to the south? What was the relationship between Benoy and the Talbot or Hayden families? Was there a relationship between Mary J. Benoy Brian's husband, William Brian, who was a stonemason, and the construction of Pleasant Fields in 1848-1850? Was there indeed another frame or log structure atop the random granite stone foundation, typical of Ellicott City's 19th Century buildings that now bears the early 20th Century frame section? Answers to these questions could confirm the historical significance of this property, possibly leading to its eligibility for the National Register under Criterion B in conjunction with the "Pleasant Fields" property. As it stands, the property does not appear to be eligible for NR listing under Criteria A, B, or C.

⁷ Rose M. Gaither, her husband and her son owned the parcel to the south with the American Four Square on it from 1930-1966.

The William ^{Brian} ~~Bryan~~ House faces west on the east side of Old Columbia Pike, 6/10 of a mile north of its intersection with Route 103.

It is a two bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) stone house, resting on a stone foundation, with wide brick chimney inset into its north wall, and a two bay wide, one room deep, two story, frame (covered with wooden shingles) north wing, resting on a full, stone foundation, extending from the north wall of the stone house.

A one story high, one bay wide, one room deep, gabled roof (running east-west) stone, summer kitchen lies east of the north extension.

One and two story high, shed roofed, frame appendages run along the east wall of both the stone house and its north extension, providing from north to south, a two story high kitchen wing, a one story high, central, kitchen extension, and a two story high, shed roofed, tool shed, with large second floor closet above.

THE WEST FACADE

The west facade holds two central bay, rectangular, cross paneled entrance doors, featuring old hardware and china knobs, flanked by end bay, rectangular, double windows, holding six-over-six lights. Four similar, vertically aligned windows rest above.

A one story high, hipped roof, open porch runs along this entire elevation.

THE NORTH & SOUTH ELEVATIONS

The north wall of the frame extension and the south wall of the stone house hold similar, central, first and second floor windows.

THE INTERIOR

The plan for the interior of the stone house features one large room downstairs and one large room upstairs. A similar arrangement downstairs for the frame extension is modified by the addition of a central hall and bath on the second floor.

The downstairs room of the stone section, once the living room, holds a marble mantelpiece on its north wall, featuring a roman arched opening, decorated with key stone. The room is lighted by an east, west and south window, and its wide random width floors are of tongue-and-groove construction.

CONTINUE ON SEPARATE SHEET IF NECESSARY

The upstairs room is large and well lighted by an east, west and south window and also features similar floors. An interesting battenwood door is centered into the room's north wall, leading into the hall of the north extension.

The large downstairs room of the north extension is lighted by a north and west window, and features wide random width, floors, featuring tongue-and groove construction. An interior entrance way on its east wall leads into a modern, well equipped kitchen, lighted by an east window. An open staircase, featuring square ballusters, runs along the east wall of the frame extension, leading to the second floor.

This second floor holds a bedroom in the north bay of the frame extension, lighted by north and west windows. A rectangular cross paneled entrance door, featuring pegged mortise and tenon construction, leads from the hall into the bedroom, which also holds a small, battenwood door, leading into a second floor play room, located over the kitchen extension. This room is lighted by a rectangular, double-hung window, holding two-over-two lights and was probably constructed circa 1910.

The south bay of the frame extension holds a hall and staircase on its east side and a modern bath on its west.

The floors for this section of the house, both upstairs and down are similar to those in the stone section, suggesting a rather early date of construction, circa mid 19th century.

The house is in excellent condition and is bordered by a lovely garden, which extends eastward to the property line.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The William ^{Bryan}~~Bryan~~ House is significant to Howard County and the State of Maryland historically, through its association with the William Bryan family of Howard County and architecturally as a fine example of a mid-nineteenth century stone dwelling with an early frame addition.

Historically, a building is noted at this location on both the Martennet Map of 1860 and the Hopkin's Atlas of 1878, and is believed to be the present house, which stands here today.

Architecturally, this stone-frame building is significant as an example of Howard County's vernacular stone architecture, originally a two room house, one room upstairs and one room downstairs, with a stone kitchen, which is located northeast of the original stone building. The first floor of the stone house holds a roman arched, marble mantelpiece which leads to a belief that circa 1860 one of two things happened to the house: 1) It was newly constructed, or 2) it was re-modeled with the installation of its roman arched, marble mantelpiece, representative of the mid-nineteenth century and the addition of the frame section.

The building is significant in its successful unification with the frame addition, presenting a single and well-integrated composition, aided by the one story high, open porch, which runs along the west facade of the building.
