The house at 10945 Johns Hopkins Road is not eligible due to the fact that it does not meet National Register Criteria A, B, C, or D. Preliminary research has not revealed any association between the dwelling and events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history (Criterion A) or the lives of persons significant in our past (Criterion B). Although the building provides an example of the vernacular Gothic Revival style, it is neither unusual nor distinguished; it does not represent the work of a master or display high artistic merit (Criterion C). There is no evidence that the property is likely to yield information important in history or prehistory (Criterion D). Thus, the property is not National Register-eligible.

CAPSULE SUMMARY
10945 Johns Hopkins Road
Howard County, Maryland
(HO-685)

The late nineteenth century house at 10945 Johns Hopkins Road has been substantially modernized; only its Gothic Revival form, a 2-1/2-story, T-shaped house with a central cross gable pierced by a lancet window, remains intact. The foundation of the house has been parged. The wood frame walls have been clad in vinyl siding, and a new brick exterior end chimney laid in stretcher bond has been constructed at the southeast elevation. Metal sash windows have replaced the original wood windows. A one-story one-bay portico with aluminum Tuscan columns has been erected at the centrally-placed entrance. Asphalt shingles cover the cross gable roof.

The property associated with 10945 Johns Hopkins Road was owned by the Scaggs family until 1894, when it was sold to the Harding family. The house may have been constructed by the Scaggs family, or upon the acquisition of the land by the Harding family in 1897. Four years after the Hardings bought the land, they in turn sold it to the Trustees of St. Paul's Lutheran Church of Howard County. This church, located in Fulton, along Scaggsville Road west of Columbia Pike claimed many prominent Scaggsville families like the Wessels, the Renns, and the Iagers, as parishioners at the turn of the century. In 1954, the Church sold the property to the Buch family. In 1994, the property passed from ownership by individuals in the Buch family to ownership by the family company, Buch Family Ltd.

The house at 10945 Johns Hopkins Road was surveyed from public property, and therefore not all elevations or outbuildings could be documented at this time.

The late nineteenth century house has been substantially modernized; only its Gothic Revival form, a 2-1/2-story, T-shaped house with a central cross gable pierced by a lancet window, remains intact. The foundation of the house has been parged. The wood frame walls have been clad in vinyl siding, and a new brick exterior end chimney laid in stretcher bond has been constructed at the southeast elevation. Metal sash windows have replaced the original wood windows. A one-story one-bay portico with aluminum Tuscan columns has been erected at the centrally-placed entrance. Asphalt shingles cover the cross gable roof.

This house is located at the end of a long gravel road, Old Columbia Road, which runs parallel to Columbia Pike south of Johns Hopkins Road. Set on a crest, the house is screened from Columbia Pike by a row of evergreens. The remaining borders of the property, to the northeast, northwest, and southwest, are wooded.

EXTERIOR DESCRIPTION:

The northeast elevation, the facade of the house, is three bays wide and expresses the 2-1/2-story height of the dwelling. At the first story, a central door opening is filled with a replacement single-leaf, panel-and-light metal door and flanked by 6/6 metal sash windows. Each of the three bays of the second story is marked with a single 6/6 metal sash window. The upper half story is pierced by a metal lancet window in the cross gable. A one-story, one-bay portico with aluminum Tuscan-style columns emphasizes the main entrance to the house.

The southeast elevation reveals the T-shaped plan of the building. The gable end wall at this elevation is devoid of openings and is marked only by an exterior end brick chimney. The rear ell however, is marked at the first story by a flush metal door with lights and two 6/6 metal sash windows. The upper story of the ell is marked by two 6/6 metal sash windows. A one-story porch with a shed roof has been erected east of the ell.

The remaining elevations were not visible from public property.

OUTBUILDINGS:

A number of outbuildings are located to the rear of the house. These include a front gable frame garage that dates from the 1920s or 1930s. To the east of the garage are at least three sheds, both metal and frame, that appear to be non-historic. To the west of the garage is a large, vinyl-clad, shed roof warehouse that dates from the late 1980s or early 1990s and a metal-clad, shed roof shed that dates from the 1970s.

This house is set on property that was originally a part of the Scaggs Farm (HO-269). In the 1820s or 1830s Charles Scaggs left Scotland and settled in rural Maryland. By 1834 he had begun to acquire land in the area known as Hell's Corner along Columbia Turnpike. By 1875 the Scaggs property totaled more than 400 acres. This property was the subject of a dispute between the heirs of Alfred Scaggs. The 1878 G.M. Hopkins map of the 6th District of Howard County illustrates a residence and property of 412 acres belonging to A. Scaggs Heirs at what is now the corner of U.S. Route 29 (Columbia Pike) and Johns Hopkins Road. The residence indicated on the map is the Scaggs Farm at 10909 Johns Hopkins Road, the first of four houses built by the Scaggs family on this property along Columbia Pike.

In early 1887, Clifton Scaggs opened a post office at the southwest corner of Scaggsville Road and Columbia Pike. By the late 19th century, the area had become widely known as Scaggsville in recognition of one of its most prominent families, replacing the area's earlier name, Hell's Corner.

The property associated with 10945 Johns Hopkins Road was owned by the Scaggs family until 1894, when it was sold to the Harding family. The house may have been constructed by the Scaggs family, or upon the acquisition of the land by the Harding family in 1897. Four years after the Hardings bought the land, they in turn sold it to the Trustees of St. Paul's Lutheran Church of Howard County. This church, located in Fulton, along Scaggsville Road west of Columbia Pike claimed many prominent Scaggsville families like the Wessels, the Renns, and the Iagers, as parishioners at the turn of the century. In 1954, the Church sold the property to the Buch family. In 1994, the property passed from ownership by individuals in the Buch family to ownership by the family company, Buch Family Ltd.

The house, although substantially updated, presents a typical example of the vernacular Gothic Revival style, as adapted by rural Marylanders. This style, which gained popularity as a "rural" style, was often used in the construction of farmhouses and dwellings in agricultural communities across America at the turn of the 20th century. This house -- a 2-1/2-story, T-shaped house with the center bay of the symmetrical facade emphasized by a central-passage entry, a centered front gable, and a lancet window in the gable -- is typical of the Gothic Revival style.
