

HO-995

10730 Scaggsville Road

Scaggsville vicinity

private

Description:

The house faces southwest toward the road, on the northeast side of the road, and is set well back from the road behind a row of other houses. This is a 1 ½-story bungalow with a stuccoed foundation and walls and a gable roof with asphalt shingles and a northwest-southeast ridge. There is an ell on the rear, to the northwest, and a modern kitchen addition on the rear to the southeast, and they both have a shed roof and asphalt shingles. The southwest elevation has a front porch that was added or heavily rebuilt, and it is enclosed with jalousie windows. There is a shed-roofed dormer that was either added or heavily rebuilt, and it has aluminum siding and two one-over-one sash. The house has one room across the front and two in the back, one in the ell and one in the addition. The southwest room has a patch in the center that may have had a stair here originally. There is a straight-run stair on the southeast wall consistent with c. 1950s construction.

Significance:

The house at 10730 Scaggsville Road was probably built as a Cape Cod in the 1930s – 50s, but has been significantly altered with large shed-roofed dormers on the front and back and an enclosed porch on the front that make it similar to a bungalow. The front porch is not contained within the roof of the main block of the house, however. The interior has also seen major alterations that probably took the original stairway and changed the floor plan, and there are few historic features surviving inside. The roof has not been maintained and the building has significant rot and mold. It is scheduled to be demolished in 2009.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Summary:

The house faces southwest toward the road, on the northeast side of the road, and is set well back from the road behind a row of other houses. This is a 1 ½-story Cape Cod later altered to be similar to a bungalow, with a stuccoed foundation and walls and a gable roof with asphalt shingles and a northwest-southeast ridge. There is an ell on the rear, to the northwest, and a modern kitchen addition on the rear to the southeast, and they both have a shed roof and asphalt shingles. The southwest elevation has a front porch that was added or heavily rebuilt, and it is enclosed with jalousie windows. There is a shed-roofed dormer that was either added or heavily rebuilt, and it has aluminum siding and two one-over-one sash. The house has one room across the front and two in the back, one in the ell and one in the addition. The southwest room has a patch in the center that may have had a stair here originally. There is a straight-run stair on the southeast wall consistent with c. 1950s construction.

Description:

The house at 10730 Scaggsville Road is located about one mile east of Scaggsville in southeastern Howard County, Maryland. The house faces southwest toward the road, on the northeast side of the road, and is set well back from the road behind a row of other houses. The ground slopes down to the northwest, northeast, and southeast, and is wooded to the northeast and east. This is a 1 ½-story Cape Cod later altered to be similar to a bungalow, with a stuccoed foundation and walls and a gable roof with asphalt shingles and a northwest-southeast ridge. There is an ell on the rear, to the northwest, and a modern kitchen addition on the rear to the southeast, and they both have a shed roof and asphalt shingles. The addition covers some buff colored brick-pattern asphalt shingle siding.

The southwest elevation has a front porch that was added or heavily rebuilt, and it is enclosed with jalousie windows and has a parged foundation and a shed roof. The porch covers a modern wood cross-buck door in the west bay and a six-over-six wood sash in the south bay. There is a shed-roofed dormer that was either added or heavily rebuilt, and it has aluminum siding and two one-over-one sash. On the northwest elevation the first story has a porch that was removed from the north bay, and a new door in this opening. The west bay has an added three-sided bay window. The gable end has a wood six-over-six sash in a modern frame. The ell has a wood six-over-six sash in a modern frame, and there is a metal vent in the foundation. The northeast elevation has stucco on the north half that could be original or early, and is probably the original kitchen. There is no opening here. The east half has a CMU foundation and aluminum siding, and this extends to the southeast end of the house. There is a shed-roofed dormer that matches the southwest elevation and also was probably rebuilt; it has a small two-over-two double-hung sash. The southeast elevation of the main block has a one-light sash in the foundation, in the south bay. The first story has a wood six-over-six sash in a modern frame in the east bay, and the gable end has a similar sash in the center.

The house has one room across the front and two in the back, one in the ell and one in the addition. The southwest room has 2 ¼-inch oak flooring that runs northwest-southeast, with a patch in the center. The northwest end of the patch is straight and aligns with the beam in the ceiling, making it appear that there was a wall here that was removed. The southeast side of the patch is ragged. The patch is about 31 inches wide and may have had a stair here originally. There is a straight-run stair on the southeast wall, with an open stringer, and it is constructed in pine. There are turned tapered balusters and newel posts that are consistent with c. 1950s-'70s construction, and there are oak treads. There is a stove chimney on the northeast wall, in the center. The northeast room has a bathroom added in the east corner, and this has a two-panel door. The flooring matches that in the southwest room. All of the mouldings are a modern flat ogee. There is a modern kitchen in the ell, with no historic features surviving. The second story has drywall and clamshell mouldings, with no old fixtures in the bathroom, and it appears to have been completely rebuilt. All of the sash are post World War II and are not original. There is significant leaking in the building and a lot of black mold. The building is slated to be demolished.
